Preface

Dear ladies and gentlemen,

Cyber insurance is becoming a real issue of fate, both for industry as well as for the insurance sector. On the one hand, the insurance companies' customers in industry and commerce demand sufficient cover even for serious attacks that may lead to significant production losses. On the other hand, the insurers' capacity is limited – and they are not yet able to identify many of the risks they face. Because technical developments and new possibilities for attackers ensure that the lessons learned from previous losses are only of limited use for statements about the future.

The dilemma is great. It is very likely that a lack of insurance cover would have a direct impact on the innovative strength of companies. And insurers would suffer severe damage to their reputation as reliable risk carriers.

How can insurers and their large customers find common ground here? What does the insurance industry have to do in order to be able to offer meaningful insurance coverage while avoiding the risk of bankruptcies? How can industry combine retention and insurance cover to ensure good protection at affordable prices? How dangerous are accumulation losses if cyber cover is purchased by every business at some point? How exposed are insurers by existing contracts that do not exclude cyber explicitly? Can insurers offer cyber coverage to individuals and make money with it?

We want to discuss all of these issues at the SZ Cyber Risk Convention. The Cyber Risk Convention is the international platform of Süddeutsche Zeitung for the exchange of information on the risks of digitisation. Experts from many companies report on their experiences – including those with insurers.

I would be very pleased to welcome you at our event in Cologne in December.
